

The Royal Pavilion

Today, we have visited the Royal Pavilion.

Its construction started with King George IV in the 19th century. At this time, George IV loved parties and buffets. Because of that, he became fat and doctors sent him on a thalassotherapy so he built the Royal Pavilion.

He was inspired by the Indian architecture and he put lots of chinoiserie in it. There were many living rooms, ball rooms and a French chef. Furthermore, Queen Victoria decided to live there, so we can notice that there are her apartments.

During the Second World War (1939-1945), this place was a hospital for injured Indian soldiers.

In 1975, a huge fire destroyed a part of the Royal Pavillon. Nowadays, the reconstitution of the monument is inspired by the 1850's representation. The Royal Pavillon is very prestigious and it's an impressive monument which has illustrated Brighton's culture for 200 years.
